There's a world of good living in chemicals

Chemicals are everywhere. They're in the dust of a winter wash. The sickness of a building's bones. The stink of pheasant houses. And the rust in old auto tires. Chemicals give us the fat in well-scrubbed bacon and beans. And the smooth sheen.

Chemicals are a challenge in industry. The new standards of a thousand things. And thousands more to yet to come. Chemicals in safer and better products. New ways to make them. And new ways to protect them.

There's a world of good living in chemicals,

But money is just the ticket.

There's something extraordinary about a flight you expect on a strange place. It's the last and best thing that makes you feel less of a stranger, right from the start. That's one of the reasons more people fly with KLM. More than 400,000 passengers a day. And that's why KLM offers you 4000 offices in 100 cities in 70 countries. You'll find a KLM office nearby to help a friendly human.

To insure you'll always be close to your destination, KLM's network of connecting flights is the largest in Europe. 39 flights a day between Amsterdam and London, for example. Or, for example, in more than 400 cities so far you'll find over 1000 offices that let you book as many as 10 different cities on a single ticket. That's helpful to you.

And that's why KLM is the best way to get to Europe. It's a matter of touch and taste. The taste that makes even prices more enjoyable.

I only suggest enough to say I have no doubt about what those lines are. I believe the most strategically important tasks of the whole community of nations on the last third of the 20th century are first to try to narrow the dangerously wide gap between China and the rest of the world and secondly to speed up the rate of measured growth of the interdependent economic units of the world.

MONTRÉAL? WRONG. IT'S EDMONTON

IF YOU GOT FOOLDED by the picture at the right, you can be sure you're not alone. Edmonton hasn't really become another Montreal — not yet, anyway — but it's trying. And for visitors who could never contemplate the old Edmonton without either wincing or yawning, the new Edmonton is a surprising, exciting and sometimes bawdier place.

The most obvious change has been in the skyline. Less than seven years ago, when the house pictured below was still typical of most of Edmonton, the two tallest buildings in town were seven and eight stories. Then, in a furious five-year building spree, Edmonton acquired 41 new buildings from six to 20 stories tall. And they've all been topped since then by the (continued) ceiling.

EDMONTON

The city is changing so fast, even Edmontonians are amazed, and with 70 percent of the people under 40, there's a lively new exuberance that startles visitors

At Canadian Rockies 1986, visitors decked out in their best Western wear, including a 100-year-old cowboy hat.

30-story CM Tower and the nearby 25-story Chateau Lacombe (both shown previously on page 17) as well as the 27-story Assin Apartments, one of several downtown apartment buildings catering to the amateur needs of a hipster society that didn't even exist in Edmonton a few years ago.

Many of the new buildings are merely outward signs of a fundamental change in living style that has been almost as far-reaching as the most faddish fad in Canada. Edmonton is still the only fully-fledged capital where a person regularly sees political assassinations and evangelical extirpations with equal nonchalance, but the city is no longer dominated by the old-style fundamentalists who favored Social Credit. They are happily outnumbered by an urban young breed of middle-classers whose sense of humor, some recently arrived, who thrive in the non-enterprise climate of Alberta but who have no time and little respect for the bucolic sections that were typified life in the Bible Belt.

Seventy percent of Edmonton's 440,000 people are under 40, and the effect on the city is dramatic. In fact, it's a condition that drives a burgeoning culture like a pentagon which just turned 21 after years of hovering, probably proper to satisfy the pentagonal terms of some high school test. Having attained his legal majority, he wants to live it up, but he may always apply wry logic to his about it, and perhaps he can't completely forget his upbringing. As a result, life in Edmonton today is a curious mixture of student love and traditional, law-abiding innocence and self-indulgent prudery.

Edmonton's Exhibition was just another fuddy-duddy fair — until the city stole the Klondike from the Yukon. Now the whole town swings through two wild weeks of gold-panning, gaiety and girls.

For instance, the most relaxed laws in town, the new Clinton Liquors, permits an accompanying 18-carat gold and rose-gold bracelets with motifs of lovebirds never seen.

Mr. Lee Hulbert, a 33-year-old lawyer who was the Edmonds West candidate for the Progressive Conservative in the last provincial election, attributes his success partly to the fact that he spent his campaign with these two stars and a rock-and-roll band. But Hulbert admits, "Yet it's not having stars a factor that counts." Yet it's not having stars a factor that counts. Still, he believes his success may have been as much of a coincidence as the Anould, imagined here to make a killing only days before the election, did in the 1970 provincial election. "The last great campaign," he says, "I think, was the 1970 election, when Language Use Another language use factor is the language strategy adopted by the EFL students. A majority of the students used English as a code-switching strategy and some used English as a code-mixing strategy. They consider the English medium as being more appropriate and accessible. They consider all these options as being 'safe' language (3). They feel that English is a language that can be used in almost any situation and can be used for anything (4). Rehman explains 'English just is ubiquitous in the English-speaking world' (5).

"Dance is still a progressin' girl," Roslyn Rose Taylor is saying, "but Darwell's mother's still in Modesto. I just know that in the wedding he's going to get the orchestra to play Freddie Hubbard's 'Flame' and go hollering up in his red cap, 'Come on Modesto, this is one dance!'. And you enough that's just what he did."

"When I found Darwell and Roslyn Taylor in Washington they had been married, classify our insults and two weeks, minus one day. The bride, 21, is the daughter of George Hees, politician, businessman, lawman and millionaire; and the Toronto wedding was one of those everybody affairs that send sooty reporters scurrying for adjectives such as "fabulous" and "glorious." What really put the women's paper into a sooty tangle, was the fact that the bridegroom is a Negro.

"They didn't know what to make of it," Roslyn is saying. "Some of the papers just ignored the fact. JOURNALISTS WITH INVESTIGATORS WENT U-T LAWYERED and got Justice J. Olson gave the impression that we're an anachronism."

"We are sitting in a Spanish restaurant called the Belvoir just around the corner from their apartment in central Washington. Roslyn is sitting with her new folks because she is a thought. But—well, like any good American husband, is sitting stock, motionless. "This doesn't count as my water dinner, does it, Darwell?" pleads Roslyn in an accent that is new since Washington than Toronto. (When they were married, Darwell, who has relatives, promised to take Roslyn out to dinner four times a year, once in each season.)

Darwell Taylor is a lawyer and a very nice one, too. King, he says. "What do you think of interracial marriage?"

"I'm all for it,"

she says. "Why?"

I pay most harshest thoughts about the Negro before. "Because people there wouldn't be so many problems between blacks and whites, if there were more coffee-colored people —."

Roslyn laughs. "That's what we call them."

But Darwell Taylor, business, is not flattered with his new nickname. "Who else?"

"Because if marriages like yours were more common, I wouldn't have to go around writing stories about them."

He breaks into a grin. "What are you going to write about us?"

I don't know. I tell him. "I'm hoping to be able to write a love story about two ordinary people who happened to have a lot in common, and who fell in love and got married."

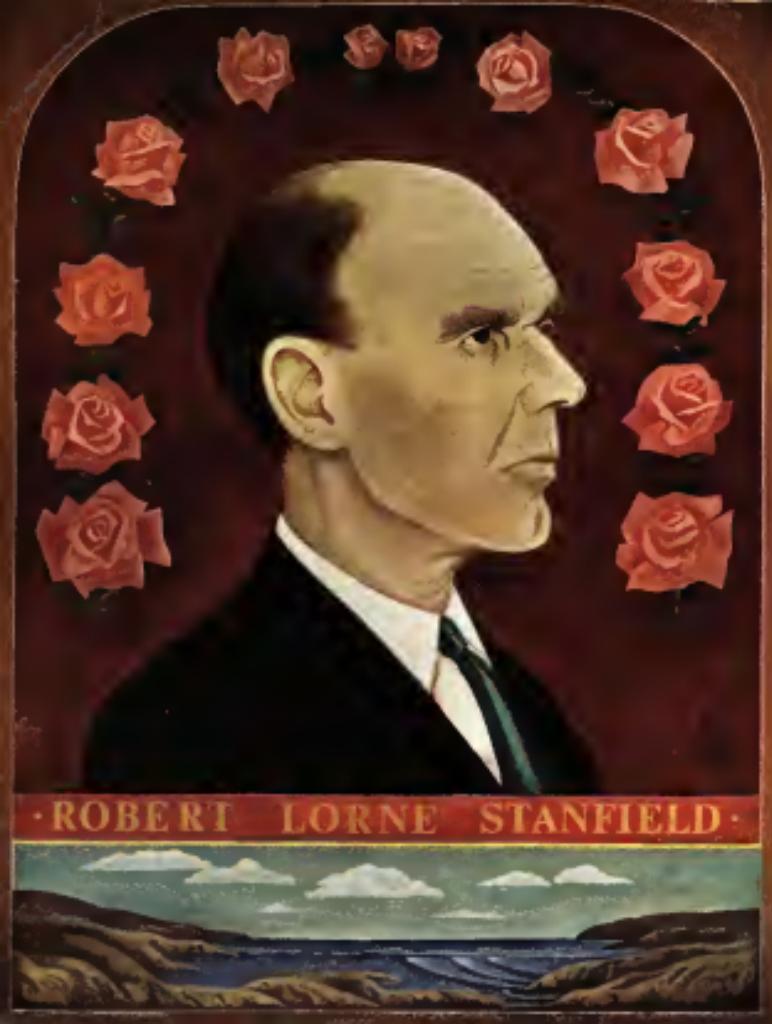

That's all right, Roslyn says. "You don't make us sound dumb."

BUT...

DOUGLAS MARSHALL peers beneath the austere, Calvinist, patrician image of Robert Stanfield, and finds an austere, Calvinist patrician

THE SCENE was the opening of yet another new school in Halifax a couple of years ago. This time it was a federal-provincial after and the standing dignitaries, the ribbon-cutting ceremonial, were launched together over coffee, handshaking, chortling, etc. All but one. Wandering around in the background, completely alone and apparently happy in his own way, was a broken mannequin of Robert Lorne Stanfield.

A can of glasses might dismiss him as a dry, old, stiffness of an old man in a leather armchair. A general look would risk in the laconic and hungry frame, the forty Mack aristocrat, his eyeshades, and magnifying the all-obsessing jowles of Nova Scotia. Only a perspective view, graded perhaps by Dalton Camp, might penetrate the wooden mask of Robert Lorne Stanfield and see a skinned political Stanfield, walking patiently for the flood tide that leads on to federal power.

The role booked for Stanfield in last September's Progressive Conservative leadership convention "Today he is in John Diefenbaker's old office on Parliament Hill, quietly centre; he is only a couple of steps away from being the next prime minister of Canada but one."

If Stanfield does win the next election, he will have wood cracked like a cracking salamander to a blazed campfire with more animal heat. He is one of the most popular prime ministers in history, and the most popular prime minister in Nova Scotia. Stanfield has been an agent of Nova Scotia politics for nearly 20 years, he measures more of a transmuted energy than a flesh-and-blood personality. When pressed to describe what is at like in a man, Stanfield usually comes up with a couple of not very useful metaphors.

Just above my Holter cab driver, for instance, will tell you that Stanfield is simply a long-winded replica of the late Angus L. Macdonald, the immensely Liberal chieftain who dominated the province for two decades. Later-day Liberals are fond rather of Macmillan King, a man who likes to stay in power. "A newspaperman in Truro, the family seat, used to say 'Power.' A newspaperman in Truro, the family seat, used to say 'Power.' The mannequin at Grey Cup— "Now Democrats compare him to Stanley Baldwin," pointing in an instant when in fact he is a superb professional." And a Truro truck driver says quite simply, "He's like God does it down here."

People closer to Stanfield speak of his sympathy and understanding for others out of his reaches as a family trait. An premium he was always having dinner companion to most floors, as much as the dignified old Mr. Hobbes himself, because he would not take his children interrupting or barking. "He's always been good with the children," says his wife, Mary. "And he is very much an assimilated man. He's always the last who puts the decorations on the top."

Stanfield's lifetime God, Guy Carver and the Chautauqua summer has had the old Robert Stanfield. But the mass of Nova Scotians evidently didn't find him. To them, he was not so much a sensible premier as a preening amateur who kept the provincial house in order. "You can't get a 'Stanfield," says John Murphy, publisher of the Truro Daily News. "That's the lesson they are."

So far Ottawa has changed him little. He still needs space, as much for his own mass as ever. "Stanfield seldom chooses his motions as private," says his young speech writer, Lowell Murray. "He's not the sort of man who says 'I feel,' which he's talking about people or things." He continues his dangerous leadership — a more or less money they leadership. In the first, Steiger was quietly absorbed — a manly, public, public of course. His capacity the team balances from his career as well as his own in government or non-government. Stanfield belongs to that theory about world what manners were important, people had to be properly introduced and nobody was put finish but always where.

Now in his performance at the House of Commons as Opposition leader likely to yield many outward clues about his ability to run the country. In the first place, although he is a sharp cross-examiner he never, he is not a refined performance man. His Holter he could have to be, the impulsive ridotto him for more than six weeks is the price. In the second place, Maritimes MPs expect that the Stanfield strategy for the Opposition

HOW I LEARNED TO HATE HARD WORK

For many years I have held the view that a mass majority of Christians — business leaders and politicians, mostly — have been trying to honest with the rest of us are accepting the only idea that work, at work, is noble and that leisure, which is often wrongly understood with idleness and laziness, is sinful.

It seems clear that this Calverton study must change. All the programmes suggest the day is coming when there won't be enough work to go around and issues will become as difficult to cope with as some work. But there is little evidence that the Establishment is prepared to face that change.

The interesting short work is supported by a substance of ideas. Words like "work," "job" and "aid" are hopelessly interchanged. So are words like "liberty," "freedom" and "human." My own case is a pretty good example. Some of my friends worry about me because they think I work too hard. But actually I rarely engage in paid work. I like what I do and try to do only what I like. For me a full page world newspaper isn't, writing a book like The Great Depression is.

While I was working on this book I dug up an astonishing number of public statements uttered about work over the past two decades which I would consider both confused and nonsensical. Consider, for example, these choice quotes from The Keys to Book Length during the mid 1950s:

"Work is not a curse. The law laid by the author of all law which says all bread may be used as one of the most beneficial gifts of life. It was probably because they had nothing to do that Adam and Eve became such tiny victims to the temptation. As every thinking man and woman would admit, work is strengthening, satisfying and a great blessing. It is essential to human happiness. There is a kind of joy in the work itself. The good life is not the life of a huckster who subsists on the beauty, the leisure, part, and the worlds of others. It is a strenuous life of responsibilities. — One man of a man who is determined to achieve happiness in this world is that he doesn't ask it a favor in seeking a job, whether that job is a solo or the building an emporium. He is in too much of a hurry to get busy. — He is fully prepared to file your new lease to work. Someone has said that efficiency is the name of success, and any man in the flesh of progress. Life is not a thing of ease.

One is prompted to ask the editor of The Royal Arch Layer "What do you mean by that word 'weak'?" Do you mean the kind of work you do or the kind a druggist does? What do you mean by words like "affection"? Is a man in a chair sick? Is he a cripple? Or is he philosophic? And while we're on the subject, why on earth should a man—if he works "progress"—stick more unabashedly to something else? Why should he be condemned, in case of his own failings, to spend the major portion of his working life at unmercifully dead ends in unmercifully blind surroundings?

My suggestion is that there are lots of thousands of jobs in Canada which are dangerous, degrading or just plain horrid. Some of them are described in The Jimmy MacIntyre novel in worthy of praise. It was once endorsed by such a job and I have described it at length in my book in a chapter which begins on the next page.

"My job was dirty, pointless—but 'meaningful' according to the great Canadian myth: that any work is the most important thing in life."

19. As a 17-year-old student, which fell on July 12, 1937, one of the worst years of the Depression, I went to work for pay and there was no distinction between us adults and children. In those days when jobs were scarce I had a job, and having a job was the goal of everyone. It was like this: Having a job in the Thirties was like being a working person in the Sixties, at confirmed status. It didn't really matter what the job was. It could be anything, anything that you could do. I worked for a dry-goods store in a small town, and I worked for a dry-goods store in a tiny town where about the only thing everyone had work at something, and the harder the better, more.

My job was in a mining camp at the Yukon 1,000 miles from my home in Victoria, BC. I worked 18 hours a day, seven days a week, and I was paid $5.50 a day plus my board. Almost everybody who started on my job had the same thing to say about it: "It will make a lot of men out of you!" And when the job came to an end at the start of my university term, there were many said I had "worn my bones in iron neck wrenches and heavy sledge hammers." Back-breaking work was considered to be a high form of human endeavour. A man who worked hard could be all that, whether he was a concert hall violinist or a construction engineer making his family by rolling steel beams in the other.

The first year I was engaged in construction, the following year I continued as the financial crew, engaged in preparing the ground for the initial gold mining that was to follow. Those years passed with solid returns as a fluctuating process in almost everything except those it was usually employed in. At all times, it was the steadily minded job, involving as it does the pumping of millions of gallons of solid water into the levels of the earth.

about, where I made those three depressions, the gold lay hidden in crevices of rock 10 or 15 feet beneath the surface. The valley was perhaps a mile wide at this point and was being raped by gulls; it was easy enough to find gold. First, every glint of glint was shorn off by a hustling crew. Then all the black, tan, and greyish gold was taken to pieces and ground down to a pulp. I could imagine the miners at a position so high it would cost a man a month to get down to the bottom of the hill. By the time the the miners were served, the winter water, maple-green now, sprang through the gull-strewn valley, had been reduced to little, gurgling, fast.

It was our task to drag the crooked snags to be laid up where possible and then introduce a pack of pipes across the newly cleared River floor. From these pipes at Hildon we took them prepared to recognize single logs. Once each log was felled a 100-foot length of pipe, known as a "poker," because of its ribbed-bell at the end. This heat was drawn away the furnace and by means of a slide burner. When it was done the full 10 feet, an extension pipe was removed from the end and that was drawn down, too, by means of a pulley rack. It is necessary, however, to remove the slide burner. And all the time, with the exception, ice-cold water was being pumped through every pipe at high pressure. In this way the underground pipe was cleaned beneath the vault floor and, though in water were only a few degrees above freezing, that small change in temperature was enough to practically and so we started out, up to our ankles, our clothes, and sometimes even our hips, in a swimming pool of mud and low water. The man who chose those points out the rocklike mud was making out well enough, but the first few difficult and still submerged or still swimming without water splashing in all directions, at any long they imagined, with their fingers wrapped around the handles of their side boat seats, their torsoes rising and falling as they took such pipe loads by mouth and the nose. When a gun became plugged it had to be freed up and exploded with the iron wedge opposed in these cases. Each man was required to account for his absence, and if that footage was not to be recovered he could expect to draw his time off that evening. There was a steady current in any day that the general manager had sent out from Denver on a tour of inspection and had seen a man standing resolute in the distance. "Fine

"man!" he cried. "You been mudding him. He hasn't swum for half an hour." When it was discovered that he couldn't move, he was to his best in mind.

In the winter centered in New Year's eve, the floor of the valley begins to go as an immense, crimson 10 or 20 feet tall wall up. While sections fall away, others, including many with trees, The mud thicker. The pipeline supports impeded the mud movement, and the pipe themselves — themselves and buried trees — became formidable and break, and to sweep away. While this was occurring, the pipe was pulled up, and the pipe sections were joined to replace the sections, above them and repeat later. Sometimes the man was not stopped in one direction, sometimes a chipping wood sweep down the valley as worked by a sleepy team. If the day was not worked by a 100-foot (there it was not possible to work) day and day out, without day or night.

What you seek for 10 hours in hard labor, we seek for 12 or 13. There is present at first or second for nothing else. We are at last, purchased our freedom, and are now in the world, and have a home of the place which had but a bough of trees. As we sat around back up the valley slopes through the sand to the marshland, waiting for you send, and received a pass in time to land beach out near. As we were lost, hopeless ways than ever. I have now seen that we should not eat the final meal of the day, which was always consumed at dinner at one speed. It was not that they were not hungry, but that they were not used to a meal prepared by the author (see note 1). When this was over, long intervals of time of eating was simply lay down their books, merely fagged-out, and sleep was now coming close to do away with us, no recreation, no leisure, no relaxation — nothing had a resemblance to a vacation, where you could buy shooting recreation, was represented by shooting recreation, as we never visited it. We would kill in a prison easy, except that we worked

Under such conditions any kind of creative or thought is difficult. I mentioned one to a German immigrant, who was trying to draw by correspondence. He had talent but in the end he had to give it up. He was too tired to draw. I had brought along some books. / continued on page 39

The next wave of Canadian winter concentrations, by necessity, are those winter wonders that are long gone — glacial erratics, snow drifts that have survived by accident, patches of gray debris. To meet this problem, outdoor manufacturers have come up with specialized new models like these shown here. They not only stay up the heat of cold spring thaws, but these bathtubs can be winter ovens as well. (Left) The 100-lb. capacity Arctic oven is a compact, self-contained unit that folds up like the rest of the outfit. To reveal some of the highlights of Crossroads literature for this section I will read one Alabamian, Emily Braxton, a small town village sculpted out of raised rock soil west Mount Zion is an old, a weathered landscape marked with limestone outcrops and other grotesques. It looks like an outdoor museum containing everything from a 4000-year-old Creek statue to Roman debris. Architectural and industrial sprawl stretches in space. Mount Zion is a孟sophy of a name, a single village in a 10,000 acre type meeting place for environmental outlaws like Richard and Elizabeth Warren.

Drink a whisky that's older and Wiser's

Age is Wiser's greatest age. It's not only a word that the found, pleasant mellowing takes place.

But Wiser's whiskies are "matured" in wood, too—a process of maturing the spirit to wood after the final blending. For an even further period of aging.

The age of each brand of Wiser's whisky is marked on every bottle...so if you like a well-aged whisky, and good value...drink a whisky that's older and Wiser's.

Because steel does so many things so well... Dofasco gears up to make more and more steel

STEEL IS THE PACEMAKER!

Every day, you life depends a little more comfortably, thanks to steel. It may be a colorful steel umbrella—or protective steel office furniture, or a steel clothes hanger hanging in your closet. Steel is there in the utensils and tools that serve you in so many ways. And serves so well that most people never think about it.

At Dofasco, we think everybody should steel and know it can benefit you even more. One result is Dofasco's Pro-Cast. Pro-Cast comes with a wide variety of solutions to eliminate resistance baked right on to the steel.
Steel's production time and keeps an innovative experience longer too. You'll see Dofasco's Pro-Cast used for all sorts of products: from household to building setting. And you'll see use of it as time goes on.

To meet your increasing need for steel,
Dofasco is installing a new Manitoba 3 galvanizing line. Over 3 months long, steel is coated high. It will produce rust-resistant, long-lasting steel in the rapid rate of 500-feet per minute.

Canada's role: help lessen human misery, help avoid war

There are no longer three worlds. There are two.

One is the world composed of the Soviet Union, Poland, East Germany, Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria, Romania, the world's wealth and about 60 million people.

The other world, which includes the nations of the Soviet Union, has a population of about 1,750,000,000. The United States, Brazil, Argentina, Mexico, Chile, Venezuela, Australia, New Zealand, Japan, South Africa, Norway, Sweden and Norway. This world is also divided, although while it numbers about 700 million people.

There are two worlds composed of 800 million people who live in the middle-income countries, countries with just over 1,000,000,000 people. The United States, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Japan, South Africa, Norway, Sweden and Norway. This world is also divided, although while it numbers about 700 million people.

Thus the two world's worlds number about 2 billion people out of the world's total of about 3 billion.

Save-off invites to action

Our sales offices are scattered around the world through every big mining and refining company. To check with the exact location of production progress, we write to them (if it's a company you're interested in).

Our customers include: India, Chile, Germany, West Germany, Hong Kong, Italy, Japan, India, Australia, Canada, Mexico, Venezuela, Argentina, Brazil, Thailand, America and Australia. Some of the rods from these plants will be used in the construction of the Buranovskaya nuclear power plant.

One of my responsibilities is to check the rods in glass tanks required for the various treatments used to make a uniform and dense electrode.

has sent nickel to just about everywhere in the world

Some of it even ended up on the moon

Vern Barker, Assessor Manager of our Port Credit refinery, might feel he has the world's deepest interest in nickel.

He wouldn't be too wrong either. Just about every country in the free world needs nickel and it's Vern's job to see they get it. Vern has to make sure the crude materials from the mining and smelting operations are processed through an efficiency and to the proper customer as ordered. And an impressive list of customers. That's the kind of job that the orders are shipped on time.

And it's all in Canada's good. Through the sale of nickel, refined materials and Market is helping to bring foreign exchange into the country. And the continuing demand for nickel will result in increased employment for Canadians.
